The Principles of Causal Conspiracy

If one places the Neutron in the Space of the three mirrors, one gets reflections in charge-mass and charge-mass. Taking away the mass mirror is like taking all the images of the mass mirror to infinity; it is like leaving the anti-mass mirror to scatter the wave away so that we get an anti-particle, which we all know is the anti-Neutrino. If we take the charge mirror away from the Neutron, it is like leaving the anti-charge mirror to scatter the wave as a positive Space charge. We call it a Proton. Taking the anti-charge-mass mirror away leaves the mass-charge mirror to scatter the wave as a negative charge-mass we call an electron. This represents the observed states of a particle in the three, open-mirror representation. The Neutron has an eightfold symmetry before it decays. This demonstrates a tangible approach to the understanding of particles and their decay modes.

One sees that symmetry arises as a result of the multitude of reflections of a single state to generate a multitude of other related states following unique mirror symmetric relations and transformations. If one considers three orthogonal mirrors, one sees that there are eight (8) representations of the images of the particle placed between three mirrors as shown in Figure 18.0.
